Authorship is alphabetical, and reflects equal if distinct contributions. I constructed one of the key analytical variables for both census years, was involved in formulating the statistical models, and contributed equally to the first draft of the manuscript. I synthesized reviewer comments into a revision plan, and made the first round of revisions for the accepted manuscript.
10. Kris Inwood and Evan Roberts (2020), “‘Indians are the majority of the prisoners’? Historical variations in incarceration rates for Indigenous Women and Men in British Columbia,” Howard

Journal of Crime and Justice, 59(3): 350-369.

Joint work on other projects motivated this data collection. I contributed to the conceptualization of the paper, advised on statistical analyses, and made substantial contributions to the literature review and theoretical framing of the paper.

Measuring the ANZACs.

<http://www.measuringtheanzacs.org/>

Citizen science website for the transcription of a complete collection of New Zealand World War I military personnel files (140,000 files, 3.7 million page images). I conceived of the project, and oversaw a programmer working on the site. I maintain the site, process data, and manage social media, communications, professional relationships with archives and museums, and outreach for the project.
